

Dear FCC,I'm writing to express my extreme opposition to lifting the ban on cell phone use aboard airplanes. Traveling is difficult enough with all the stresses and tribulations without the inevitable rudeness of cell phone use in such close quarters. Freedom is a great thing, but one-sided personal conversations is an unnecessary direction for technology to dictate. We have enough trouble with ethical use of cell phone cameras without adding to the list of social breakdown. The only people this can possibly benefit are business people who can wait or use other means of (uninvasive) communication. Thank you for listening.
Jacob Covey